NBC Chicago Style Setters Preen For Easter Parade

Stubborn cockwicks are being patted down, eyebrows plucked, fur coats groomed and nails burnished at NBC Chicago these days, in anticipation of that harbinger of Spring, the Easter Parade. This year's parade is not the routine news and hardly worth a mention, were it not for the fact that the anticipated fashion show is scheduled for Chicago's Lincoln Park, and the actors are the simian stars of NBC-TV's Zoo Parade!

Yes, there's intense rivalry in the Zoo's Monkey House, for rumormongers would have it that well-behaved boys and girls from the Marlin Perkins stable of primitive thespians will be permitted to strut for the Zoo Parade cameras. Heinie II, the chimp, and Ling Wong, the orang-utan, are veterans of the program's past Easter showings, and feel secure of a place on the parade float. The third member of the Zoo Parade's erstwhile "Terrible Trio," Sinbad the gorilla, reposes in the quarters he inherited from the famed Bushman — too aloof to bother with such adolescent simian activities as being a clothes horse, and, from a practical point of view, too big to be permitted the freedom and excitement of the outdoor event on Easter Sunday. Tong and Tang, the baby orangs, were members of the display set when Zoo Parade last held an Easter Parade. The twins have not seen their costumes yet, and are agog over the possibilities of organandy and ostrich feathers, pin stripes and cutaways.

It's doubtful that the zooabees will receive anything so elaborate, however, for while Marlin Perkins operates possibly the only fashion center in the world that grows its own ostrich feathers, he insists that the plumage remain on the feathered owners! Mambo, the traveling capuchin monkey who accompanied the Zoo Parade troupe to Florida on a recent filming expedition, will undoubtedly model something sumptuous — perhaps Bermuda shorts and a tropical helmet in the manner of his Florida companion, Jim Hurlbut. Mambo and Jim made the Florida trip a year together, and were fellow sunbather patients as well, the result of sitting in a jeep in the unfamiliar hot sun for most of a day while the films were made. Hurlbut came up with his familiar Zoo Parade tale. "As usual," he sighed, "they put the saline on the monkey first, while I sat and burned."

Old Heinie II, irrepressible scamp of the program and self-styled best friend or Hurlbut, has confided to his chum that he really doesn't care what he wears. "Matter of fact," he is supposed to have said, "if they run out of costumes, I'll be happy to just go on as my old, lovable, modest self!"
