CENTENNIAL SCRAPBOOK: Looking Back to 1867

25-C Depopulation of the South 1861-65 by ravages of war continued in post-bellum years through migrations of unyielding Confederate families.

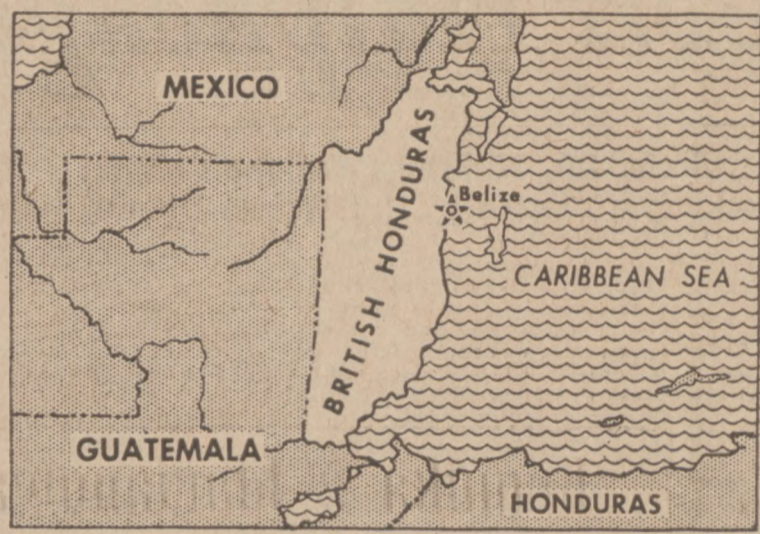

Bananas proved unprofitable, and the colony turned to sugar-raising successfully.

In 1867 the Rev. Levi Pearce of the Mississippi Methodist Conference and his sons led an initial company of about 100 to British Honduras, and obtained on easy terms about 1000 acres of Caribbean coastal land south-east of Belize, capital of the British possession.

A detachment went back to bring 200 more colonists from Mississippi, while the remainder of the company began preparing land for the banana crops.

Transplanted Southerners who established the longest enduring Confederate outpost were the several hundred who went in 1866 to Belize. Modern travelers to the city of Americana, 100 miles west of Rio de Janeiro, find Dixie traditions maintained among the cotton plantations.
