MINISTER ANTONESCU'S VISIT TO POLAND

The visit of the Rumanian Foreign Minister, Monsieur Anto-nescu, to Warsaw took place this work. It followed several less official Rumanian visits to Poland, such as those of the Rumanian engineers, the Rumanian lawyers and the Rumanian members of aparliament. More than a hundred parliament. The Rumanian Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. THE "COLONIAL DAYS" IN POLAND

The 21-st, 22-nd and 23-rd of November were devoted in Poland to a nation wide propaganda for the obtaining of colonies. During these three days meetings were held in every town in Poland and street demonstrations were organised in order to spread the idea of the necessity of Polish colonies among the masses.

The "Colonial Days" were organised by the Polish Maritime and Colonial League, which has a membership of 500.000. Every member is expected to bring into the League a new member during the "Colonial Days". Should that plan succeed, the League would dispose soon of one million members.

The propaganda conducted by the Maritime and Colonial League completely excludes the possibility of any territorial aggrandizement to be brought about as the result of an international conflict. The policy of this League is to exert pressure on the Polish govern-ment in order to make it demand mandates from the League of Nations.

The meetings held all over Poland passed the following re-solution:

- In the present situation of Po-land, the question of colonies is one of major importance, because:
 - a) Poland must have raw ma-terials in order to develop the country industrially,
 - b) Poland must have markets. Poland must have markets, so that its industry may provide work for the unem-ployed and guarantee the development of towns,

Poland's Populational Problems and Jewish Emigration

Amongst the economic prob-lems facing Poland to-day, there is one which has of recent years become steadily more and more pressing: this is the uninter-rupt dimcrease in over population and the consequent difficulty of finding employment for this large surplus population. surplus population.

surplue population. Poland was an emigrant country long before the World War and from her present lerritories every year. This afflux was resumed after the stoppage caused by the War, but of recent years it has been almost entirely checked. This inhibition of emigrant traffic is at the root of the constantly growing economic difficulties of the conntry. In growing economic difficulties of the country. In turn, these difficulties have greatly hindered counteraction against the econo-mic crisis and have indirectly mic crisis and have indirec-led to adverse repercussions the economic situation of a whole of east-central Europe.

When it became clear, that When it became clear, that the normalization of world eco-nomic relations would have to be undertaken by united interna-tional effort, the Polish Govern-ment likewise decided to draw the attention of the world to the serious problems presented by over-population in Poland.

Before the War, a large pro-Before the War, a large pro-portion of the emigrants leaving Poland were Jews. The checking of this emigration resulted inter-alia in a still higher percentage of Jewish population in the country. A Jewish problem ap-peared — one having nothing in common with cheap anti Semitism, but arising as a direct conse-quence of the Jewish nonulation quence of the unsound social struc-ture of the Jewish population itself; the Jews in Poland are for the most part small shopkeepers, traders and artisans and that in such numbers, that the excess rural population of the Republic, although stiffing in the over-crowded rural districts, finds its way barred to these occupations. The symptoms of anti-Semitism which have appeared recently. which have appeared recently, are regrettable consequences and by no means the cause of this population process.

In spite of the fact that the emigration of the Jews from Poland is in the closest con-Poland is in the closest con-nexion with Polish emigration as a whole, it has none the less to be treated apart on the interna-tional forum (as witness the statements made by the Polish delegate in Geneva at a Session of the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations). This is because the fundamental regula-tion of this matter transcends tion of this matter transc the exclusive interests of Poland and has become a burning ques-tion for the whole of eastern and part of central Europe.

The large-scale organization of Jewish emigration has become a vital necessity. This is affirmed by the Jews themselves, by the Polish Government, and the League of Nations will doubtless requises in this action. acquiesce in this opinion.

It will be of interest to cite recent enunciations made eminent spokesmen of the Z ist movement regarding Jewish emigration: Mr. Isaac Grünbaum, former deputy to the Polish Seym, now director of the Department of Labour at the Jewish Agency of Lhooff at the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem, stated the follow-ing in a striking interview granted to Polish journalists and heedless of the storm of protest which he could expect from certain Jewish groupings: "The market-stall is being en-nobled in Poland... (that is to prove the state of the store nobled in Poland... (that is to say, the Polish peasant is begin-ning to enter trade); we will have to leave. The hour of exodus has struck for the broad masses of Jewry... even if a workers', and peasants' govern-ment were to arise in Poland, emigration could not be stopped. Dr. Tartakower, one of the delegates of Polish Jewry to the Jewish World Congress which deliberated at Geneva in August this year, gave the number of Jews who should emigrate from Poland as 120.000 per annum, and added: "The elbowing out of Jews from their economic footholds in a number of countries is in many cases not only a result of anti-Semitic propaganda and of the specific economic policies the respective governments is the outcome of the immutable laws of economic deve-lopment, which, at least during the immediate future, can in no wise be changed.

Mr. Zabotynski, the founder Mr. Zabotynski, the founder of the New Zionist Organization, the indefatigable champion of a free Jewish State and of the rights of Jews in the countries of their sojourn, proclaims the necessity for the exodus of 1,500,000 Jews from these lands. The communiqué of the Organi-zation, announcing ils consiliu-tion and aims of this body, after dealing with the sitnation of the tion and aims of this body, after dealing with the situation of the Jews in Germany, frankly states that there are other countries where the Jewish element is being pressed out from its eco-nomic positions quite independent-ly of the Government, but as an elemental process, inherent in the nature of social evolution. The situation can be met only by one of two solutions: either Comone of two solutions: either Com-munism, or emigration (exodus) from these countries from these countries... It follows from the above that the Polish Government has not devised or imagined the problem of Jewish emigration but has merely drawn attention to its existence. Amongst others, this is confirmed by Dr. Gottlieb, deputy to the Polish Seym, writing in the Yiddish daily "Moment" of Warsaw in which, after a review of the Jewish World Congress, he confirmed the Congress, he confirmed the objective need for Jewish emi-gration from eastern Europe and stranged the necessity for an tressed the necessity for an xamination of this question on the international forum

All these opinions of repre-sentative Jewish spokesmen are quite unequivocal. But the realization of the need for large-scale Jewish emigration is still far from furnishing a solution of the problem.

It is necessary to consider the territories which have so far served for Jewish emigration and of those areas which could be utilized for this purpose in the

Although Palestine has since Although Patestine has since 1922 taken up over 250.000 Jewish immigrants (of which about 100,000 came from Poland), it is not a country of unlimited possibilities. The United States absorbed four million Jews during absorbed four million Jews during less than a century but emigra-tion to that country has today virtually been stopped in practice. The South American republics are also beginning to close their doors to Jewish immigrants, and are applying prohibitive policies and in general adopting an at-titude of distrust, considering the Jaws es a communitically.

These conditions have the revival of a movement in certain Jewish quarters — one which first arose at the turn of the twentieth century and the aim of which is to create, apart from Palestine, a more or less autonomous territory upon which the Jews could become inhabitants of a free land

This movement has led to the foundation of the Frailand League for Territorial Colonization, which rence in 1935 with the participa tion of delegates from Poland Great Britain, France, Germany

The Co-operative Movement in Poland.

It is quite evident, even to the casual observer, that co-operation in Poland is now passing through a period which can be justly considered as a revisal. Owing to the calamities of war, the devastation and the great and absorbing task of rebuilding the country, co-operation in Poland aroused in the community less interest than was its due. But now when the country has settled down, the greatest difficulties overcome, the Government and all interested in the economical conditions and the weifare of the country, specially of the pessant population, seem to rea-lize that one of the surest and most appropriate means of bet-tering the lot and the standard of life of the masses, particularly of the farmers, is cooperturn. It is quite evident, even to the of life of the masses, particularly of the farmers, is co-operation. The columns of the daily press bring nearly every day news of smail co-operative societies of producers being formed in the country. In one village the com-mons offered by the community and transformed into an orchard, will assure a living to the unemployed who are forming a society of fruit producers. The small silk industry of the country is considering the transformation is considering the transformation of its work and plant on co-operative lines. Small handicraft, people in the country exploited by a sweating system of unparal-leled low payments, realize that their salvation lies on the road o operation.

Before starting on the history of Polish co operation, we must recall that just a year ago the Polish Co-operative Women's Guild was founded and that in this short time it proved to be a very helpful factor in the spreading of the co-operative idea. It is members, for the greater part professional, hard-working women, brought such a wealth of enthusiasm and energy to the cause, that what a year ago was a small handful of women is to day a very active Before starting on the history ago was a small handful of women is to day a very active organization on the way to a powerful development. by organizing the emigration of the Jews from Poland. It would appear evident that the successful solution of this problem requires the co-operation of the competent Jewish quarters with Poland. It is sincerely to be hoped that this matter — in be hoped that this matter — in the interests bolh of the Poles and of the Jews themselves— will finally be settled in ac-cordance with the interests and postulates of both sides.

in Poland a long time before the time of the pioneers of Rochdale. The oldest form of co-operation known in this country is probably that on the Baltle coast where Prisian colonists founded in old times mutual halp societies call. times mutual help societies call-ed "mashoperies", a Friese or Dutch expression. Nearer the present aspect of co-operation were the aims of a society, providing loans for purchasing live stock, founded as faras 1715 providing loans for purchasing live stock, founded as farsa 1715 in Pabianice, by the Reverend Father Jordan. The history of the 18th as well as the 19th century speaks of many semiphilantrop-ical agricultural co-operative societies of which that of Hru-bieszów, founded by the eminent statesman and reformer Staszic had features strongly reminiscent of a modern agricultural credit ant loan society. It would lead us too far to give an outline of all the stages of the co-ope-rative movement in pre-war Poland. Let us name those men who had the greatest merits in its spreading: Francis Stefczyk and the two pioneers of the consumers' movement Stanisław Wojelechowski, former president of the Republic of Poland and Romauld Mielczarski. The first Union of Consumers' Co-operative Societies in the part of Poland under Russian rule held their first Conference in 1908 represen-ing 600 societies with 40.000 members. This Union acting at the same time as the Wholesale Trading Society was acknowledged by the Russian Government only A venra later. We must acknowledge here the afforts of the Government to lift the heavy burden from the shoulders of the farmers in general and those united in agricultural co-operative sociefies in particular. Warsaw University

The University of Warsaw, now called the Jozef Piłsudski Univer-sitg, celebrated this year only the 120th anniversary of its founding, and, although the youngest among Polish institutions of higher learning and hampered for many years by difficult circum-stances, is now the most fre-quented of all Polish universities, and numbers many prominent scholars on its faculty.

When Kraków aircady had its Jagiellonian Academy, boasting of a tradition of many centuries, and Wilno, Zamość, and Lwów, thanks to the kings Stefan Batory thanks to the kings Stefan Balory and Jan Kazimierz Waza, had splendid universities, Warsaw lacked a school of this kind. During the reign of *King Stani-*staw August Poniatowski, the Szkoła Rycerska was formed, but it could not replace a scientific robcol and the pure wristiand it could not replace a scientific school, and the one maintained by the bourgeoisie, founded in 1799, the Szkoła Lekarska (A school of Medicine) embraced only one branch of education, and could not be compared with the other universities in Poland.

It was only after the creation of the Duchy of Warsaw that it was possible to think of establish-ing a school of higher learning. The Napoleon Code and its prac-The Napoleon Code and its prac-tical application to everyday life made learning necessary. The first higher school dates from this time. In 1808 a School of Law, in 1809 a School of Medi-cine, and in 1811 a School of Administrative Science were opened by Governmental decree.

But even during this period of war and political fluctuation great achievements in educational prest achievéments in educational reform were reached by the Mi-nister of Education, Stanisław Kostka Połocki and by Samuel Linde (the author of a famous Polish dictionary). Their work, especially during the years 1812 16, was rendered extremely dif-ficult. But Potocki, and with him Czartoryski and Czacki, did not interrupt their plans for the creation of a University, and special delgations (with Stani-sław Staszic as a prominent member) prepared reports on the budget, statute and scientific programme. programme. In was only in 1816 that it became possible to induce Tsar Alexander I to issue a decree Alexander 1 to issue a decree permitting a University to be opened in Warsaw. It had five faculties, theology, law and admi-nistration, medicine, philosophy, science and art.

The school developed quickly The school developed quickly, the number of students growing from year to year. Its library, at first only having 25,000 volu-mes, by 1824 owned 120,000 books (now over half a million). At Ujazdous, now Ujazdouskie Aleje, a botanical garden was opened, and it is still today the pride of the University. Profesor Armiń-ski was instrumental in organi-ring an saferonomical observatory zing an astronomical observatory zing an astronomical observatory. Shortly, however, conditions became less favonrable. The first blow was the dismissal of Stanisław Potocki. The second was the liquidation of various patiotic organizations in Wilnow which had strong repercussions on university life in Warsaw. Finally, during the insurrection of 1830, we find the students forming a special Guard of Academicians under the leader-ship of Professor Lach-Szyrma. When the insurrection failed, When the insurrection failed, the University was closed on November 19, 1831, and remained so for a long time.

The University was resusci-tated under the name of Szkoła Główna (Central School) by Alexander Wielopolski in 1862. It remained open during the insurrection of 1863. But in 1869 insurrection of 1868. But in 1869 it was changed into the Imperial University, with all lectures in Russian. The present exhibition at the Zacheta, in addition to the indi-vidual shows reviewed in last week's issue of the Warsaw Week's issue of the warsaw Weekly, also contains a small collection of bookbindings, the work of Mme Erika Valter, wife of the Latvian Envoy in Warsaw. or the Latvian Envoy in warsaw. They are all of very fine work-manship and designed with great good taste. From an artist's point of view the entirely personal, modern designs, such as the binding of the "Livre Sans Queue all Tête" are superior in componi Tête" are superior in compo-sition to those modelled on tra-ditional motives of renaissance or peasant decoration. Besides these one or two very severe designs in black lettering on plain parchment there is a very striking blue binding with an enamelled effect and a decoration in white.

The new exhibition at the IPS is very interesting indeed. Near on twenty prints by Laboureur are very interesting indeed, item on twenty prints by Laboureur are in themselves no mean attraction and the large collection of work by Tadeusz Kulisiewicz and the sculptures of A. Zamoyski are a satisfactory fulfilment of the expectations raised by the first gimpse of the exhibition. Four other French etchers (the term being used indiscriminately for all artists working on metal plates whatever their technique) exhibit beside Laboureur, but he is by far the best. There is a lightness of touch, a limpidity and serenity in his prints which defies decription. More especially his rendering of trees — as in The Deserted House (73) or Flood at La Briter (75) — is wonderful. at La Briére (75) - is wonderful of power from Marshal Józef Piłsudski. It has well fulfilled the task placed upon it by the Marshal: the inculcation of science and art. On May 16, 1935, after the death of the Marshal, the Council death of the Marshal, the Council of the University, in order the better to link its achievements with the name of Pland's saviour, changed the name of the Uni-versity to that of "Jozef Pilsud-ski University".

Their beauty is more moving than that of real trees, or at least such as real trees only disclose such as real trees only disclose in rare moods or moments. This is not to say that his treatment of other subjects is inferior — Market Day, The Fisher, La Cage are delightal. In fact, prints which one feels tempted to cri-ticise adversely or to pass over as less worthy of notice would range as the high lights of many another artist's collection. Large makes seen to suit the artist less range as the high lights of many another artis's collection. Large plates seem to suit the artistless the Andromeda and The Ento-mologist. The prints exhibited by Marcel. Gromaire are mainly remarkable for their bold tech-nique and the almost aggressi-vely 'constructive' design, but seem utterly devoid of feeling, except for a singular obsession by details of the female body. Pierre Dubreuil exhibits eighteen prints, mostly line engravings. Some of them evoke reminscen-ces of Laboureur, but though good, they have not the same lightness. The most personal and lively note is struck in a small dry-point. The Bathers (14). The expinical achievement of the line engravings is stupedous, equal to that of the old engravers. Jean Frélaut exhibits a number of drypoint etchings. Edouard Oorg etchings proper (eau forte). The exhibition is particularly interesting in that it presents a branch of graphic art not very popular among Polish engravers who in general prefer the wood block.

ART EXHIBITIONS

A case in point is Tadeusz Ku-lisiewicz who after a short season of etching turned to wood engraof etching turned to wood-engra-ving, changing not only his me-dium but his entire style. The lyrical quality of his etchings has disappeared without trace from his sombre, sometimes almost brutal woodcuts. Of hate he seems too preoccupied with the possibilities of his very original technique, to the detri-ment of the force of his work. The prints of his earlier period (nrs 31, 48, 49, 45) where the composition is not obscured and disturbed by a jungle of curves and patches that distract the attention and diminish the power of expression, carry far more conviction than the later expe-riments in black and grey — for of while there is almost none in some prints. The conscious pri-mitlvism of the later prints is evidently an attempt on the part of the artist to find a new mode of expression to save bimself of the artist to find a new mode of expression, to save himself from a constant repetition of the old, successful formula — the act of a true artist—but this experi-ment has not yet wholly succe-eded, in the case of nrs. 52-53 the eded. In the case of nrs. 52-53 the artist's technique has been very happily applied. The softer side of his nature is very evident in the collection of drawings which of his nature is very evident in the collection of drawings which deserves high praise. It is astonishing how the same subjects which in the woodengravings strike a note of despair under-go a complete change of cha-racter by the artist's change of attitude. The change of medium shore would not suffice, pencil and chalk can be used with as much force as the graver, but where the artist has chosen to make his prints illustrate the curse of Adam, drawings seem tales from fairyland. Lines and shadows that are almost intan-gible, that will drift away in a moment — if the shape is agly, or old, or deformed, that is surely but a passing enchant-ment. The title-pages and intro-ductions which Kullisiewicz has engraved for his three portfolios of prints are also exhibited. The large page of text for "Bacowka" is a very interesting piece of lettering. lettering.

The sculptures of August Zaine sculptures of a high standard except for one or two which have probably suffered from the wishes of a model whom the artist could not disregard. Nrs 2, artist could not disregard. Nrs 2, 7 and 5 are particularly good. The exhibition will be something of a surprise to those who have not seen anything of the artist's work since his show some dozen years ago or more at the Za-cheta where he created a sensa-tion by exhibiting masses of strange, utterly unrecognisable forms.

In addition to these collections there are some prints by Wła-dysław Jahl and paintings by Lam and Leonhard.

HERMINIA NAGLER

Authoress of an interesting Saga on Polish pre-war life

The current year has brought The current year has brought forth a great number of interest-ing literary novelies, among which, and deserving first atten-tion, is a three-volume novel of Mrs. Herminia Nagler, Krauzowie iInni (Krauze Family and Others), a work with a true epic swing. It is once and with the colourful title, once and with the colourful a work with a true epic swing. It is concerned with the colourful little town of Bory in Galicia (Matopolska) during the years 1885-67, and depicts life and relations in that part of the country, then under Austrian oppression. Mrs Herminia Nagler, more than twenty years ago, showed possibilities as a writer while undertaking profound scholarly investigations in history at the University of Ludow, but simul-taneously publishing her first feuiletons, articles and short tories in the daily papers, She already then had the nerve of a thoroughbred writer, a peculiar perceiving, a subtle penetration in her portrayals of men and in descriptions of nature or of facts. Her literary work, however, she regarded as something marginal, regarded as something marginal, and she did not allow any arti-stic satisfaction accruing from it to interfere with her finishing her historical studies at the University. Having accomplished her scholarly education, the temper of a born writer forced her to begin a career as novelist and poet

1921 she published her first book, a collection of poetry en-titled Otwarte oczy (Open Eyes), which showed an effective form of language and metaphor, and sincerity of feelings. But poetry, however, (although in 1925 a second selection of verses entitled Szare Godzing — Twilight Hours had some success) was not the form in which the talent of Mrs. form in which the talent of Mrs. Nagler could best express itself. Poetry has given only to many moments of her novels the subtle expression and beautiful tone, but her natural medium is prose. The first collection of Mrs. Nagler's short novels, published in 1924 in Lwów, Czarny Pies (A Black Dog) is marked by good style, as well as by an ability to create living interseting human either. living, interesting human silhu ettes. But that was only a talent ettes, but that was only a talent-ed essay in comparison with the second series of sketches, appearing in 1928 and entitled Motyw z księżyca (A Motif from the Moon), where the possibilities of her language, her point of view on the world and men, her psychologic insight, are ripening. At the same time the author shows great talent in creating suggestive atmosphere in the situations of her novels and great plastic in her descriptions of nature. Espe-cially in the title story the light of the moon described by Mrs. Nagler's pen, gives myslerious pictures, as if designed by the hand of a painter, who knows how to bring out the night landscape with all its secrets and dark atmosphere. atmosphere in the situations of

The first great novel of Mrs. Nagler is an outstanding success and even in the life of literary Poland. She published it in 1980 under the title Zawaldroga (The Lubber). It is astory of a youth, Franek, the son of a divorced couple, to whom this circumstance in his parents' life occasions much disappointment in his own. He cannot, then, understand the feelings of bhis mother and father, and accuses them that his youth is depirved of the right develop-ment against the background of The first great novel of Mrs is deprive of the right develop-ment against the background of family life. sentiments both of his mother and his father. Giving to her novel a large background, showing the actual life in Poland with its character-istic human figures and polit-ical events Mrs. Nagler, in the portrayal of her here, has given a rare picture of a young soul. All the experiences of Fraand sorrows, his psychological consihis psychological consi-derations and unev-eness have so much of truly youthful re-action, that his figure alone is a sufficient reason for placing Mrs. Nagler's work Mrs. Nagler's work in a prominent po-sition in modern Polish literature. *

But the best of Mrs. Nagler's literary achievements is unachievements is un-doubtedly this splen-did novel Krauzo-wie i Inni (The Krauze Family and Others), which will perhaps begin a whole cycle under whole cycle under the title Karlery

The Conservative Press headed by Czas is critically disposed towards the economic and financial policy of the govern-ment being in favour of what it calls "greater elasti-city of the currency", in other words modified devaluation. "We should hasten on Poland's inclu-cion, into world second hy bold words modified devaluation. "We should hasten on Poland's inclu-sion into world economy by bold moves in currency. In other words, the course of the currency ought to be rendered more elastic withoat forejudging its fundu-mental par of exchange". It demands that the Sejm ought to interfere in the investiture plans of vice-premier Kwiatkowski, and writes. The question of the investiture plan ought to become the dominant of the parliament-ing session. In so far as the Sejm proves able to carry through the struggle for the investiture glan it will prove that it is after all a political factor which must be counted with". everyday life. The representative inhabitants of Bory are portrayed by Mrs. Nagler with equal force in all the gradations of their social positions, beginning with the aristocrat, Zabielski, down to the countryfolk and servants. Mrs. Nagler treats her women with fine sympathy and the gallery portrayed in the book, in which they confine themselves mostly or pivate life, adds to the colour and charm of the work. to private life, adds to the colour and charm of the work. Mrs. Nagler has also well underlined the position of the national minorities and their rôles and positions in political and partiotic life. One of the central figures is Doctor Goldman, a Jew, a very noble man with profound culture, who, aside from his place as physician, plays an eminent rôle in the life of Bory. it is through him that a reconci-liation between the Polish and Jewish population is accomplished always in the name of Poland's future freedom. The Krauze family headed by old Joseph Krauze, a drs. Nagler undoubledly wished to impress on us the great value these minorities had in the political and patriotie life of Galicia in those times. Like her other nevels, this one

Like her other novels, this one is replete with many beautiful descriptions of nature.

This book, which was written with a special understanding of the historical and habitual back ground, will remain in Polish li-terature not only as a proof of Mrs. terature not only as a proof of MFs. Nagler's talent, but as a genuine picture of the epoch, for, as she says in her preface: The Krauz family and others, whose human affairs form the contents of this book will prove to the reader that what I relate here took place during the years 1865-7 at Borg in Galicia.

In concluding this review Mrs. Nagler's literary achievement we would add that she has writ-ten a play, Obcy Człowiek (The Stranger), which is to appear this season in Warsaw.

And as the five year investiture plan foresees expenses amounting to one billion 600 million zlotys, the Conservatives including the big landowners and industrialists want to secure for the meelyse influence Iandowners and industrialists want to secure for themselves influence on the way this money is spent". They fear, writes Gonlee', that the government plan will push aside their interests. Gonlee also asserts that this year's parlia-mentary session will be distin-guished by a great battle over the government's economic and financial plan". In authori-tative circles it is stated that Marshal Smigly Rydz will agree to this programme as it is con-nected with the increase of our industrial and military potentiaindustrial and military potentia Rurjer Poranny discussing the Kurjer Poranny discussing the devaluation suggestions of the Conservatives writes: "For the big landowners devaluation spells an automatic cancelling of the indebted landed estates and in this way their rescue from com-pulsory re-division. For the great industrialists the "elasticity of money is to become an instrument for export dumping which in reality would lead to throwing the costs of financing increased export on the shoulders of the workers, whose pay represents export on the shoulders of the workers, whose pay represents the only element of the costs of production subjected to lowering and to endowing foreign consu-mers with the sacrifices to which the home consumer would be compelled"

The disturbances at the uni-versities have called forth various comments and suggestions in the Press; Slowo, a Wilno paper, writes: "We think that the dispute must end by a regulation of the University Senate that the audi-ence be divided into groups of students' organizations, and in such laboratoria where the space is limited tickets might be given individually. Finally such orga-nizations as 'Odrodzenie' (a Ca-tholic students' organization) and others which wish to sit together stand from their reports at meet-ings, could conclude an arram ings, could conclude an arran-gement with Jewish organizations and shine with an example of good relations."

In fact so many are there that it is only possible to select the most striking. To these belongs in first place the concert of the Polish Kadio orchestra conducted by Gregory Filelberg at the Roma Cinema, on Nov. 14th. The programme contained many interesting items, such as the Variations on the theme of "Big Ben" at Westmin-ster by Ernest Foch and above all the music to Szymanowski's ballet "Harnasie", played for the first time intis entirety, including chorus and solo in Warsaw. Un-fortunately, we have not yet had the opportunity of seeing this ballet on the Warsaw stage. The music alone is so overwhelming that the effect of the whole music the music tells its own tale and the music tells its own tale and seems to require no further adjuncts. The grandeur, majesty and wildness of the Tatra moun-tains are created to perfection and the final tenor solo, beauti-fully song by M. Janowski seems to sam up the whole spirit of that region, that has been the inspiring source of so many Poilsh artists. Of outle different tyne was Berdiajew who, as a Russian, was evidently in his element in di-recting the second symphony of Scrlabin, a romantic work con-taining many beautiful moments but suffering from a lack of concentration and over leng-thiness. The soloist Leopold Munzer is an excellent pianist and musician which is not always synonymous. It was to be reg-retted that he played on a Ple-gel piano, the tone of which is to oshallow and sharp for a Beethoven Concerto, and was better adopted to the brilliant, impetuous but somewhat noisy Prohofiew concerto. artists. quite different type was Symphony Concert at the harmonic conducted by V,
